

REAPER CLAIMS POPE LEO.

Supreme Pontiff of Roman Catholic Church Passes from Earth.

LONG STRUGGLE IS ENDED

Though Long-Expected Triumph of the Grim Reaper Shocked Rome, and Whole City is in Mourning—Pontiff Was Ninety-three Years of Age and His Reign Most Remarkable.

Pope Leo XIII, the supreme pontiff of the Roman Catholic church, passed from earth in the Vatican in Rome, Italy, at four o'clock Monday afternoon at the age of ninety-three years. To the last the pope fought for life, though to all he declared he was ready to leave. Just before the final end came, he moved his lips feebly, as though a parting message struggled to find strength for expression. His last articulate words were a benediction.

The news of the pope's death spread rapidly throughout Rome and caused a most pronounced sensation though his demise had been hourly expected for two weeks. The whole city is in mourning.

Early in the day a stop had been put to the visits which had been so frequently made to the room of the dying pontiff.

Pope Leo died in harness, if not standing, as he declared he would be, at least performing his duties to the end.

Immediately following the death of the pope cable dispatches and telegrams were dispatched to all parts of the world, advising the sovereigns, rulers and foreign governments of the death. Before night fell many telegrams of condolence reached the Vatican, coming from emperors, kings, political rulers and high church dignitaries abroad. The Vatican officials were deluged with these messages.

The death of the pope brings about a widespread change in all the administrative departments of the church and considerably influences questions of church policy. The change within the Vatican affects practically all the officials from the highest to the lowest.

The chief international questions which may be affected by the death of the pope are those connected with the suppression of religious orders in France, the change of the clergy in the new Spanish-American possessions, the selection of the successor of the late Cardinal Vaughan and attendant questions connected with the administration of the church in England.

All the newspapers in Rome, including those favorable to the present institutions, publish long eulogistic articles about the pontiff. The only discordant note was struck by the socialist organ, Avanti, which says:

"We socialists, without disdain, but with indifference, paid before this corpse and await the new enemy."

The Italian government has renewed the most energetic orders. Premier Zanardelli attending to the work personally, but it cannot and will not take participation directly in the mourning.

NICHOLAS TO ROOSEVELT.

United States is Officially Informed that Hebrew Petition Will Not be Received—Advice Heeded.

A Washington special says: It was learned Thursday night that the state department had received a reply from Russia stating that it neither would receive nor consider the matter of the Jewish petition on the subject of the Kishinef incident.

This information came in the form of a cable dispatch from Mr. Riddle, American charge at St. Petersburg, to whom was committed the delicate task of inquiring of the Russian government as to its attitude with respect to the presentation of the petition.

It is believed that this will end the matter and that no further steps will be taken by this government to bring the views of the petitioners to the attention of Russia, although as yet no consideration has been given by the president to the course to be pursued in the light of Russia's response to our inquiry.

The reply that Russia would make to all suggestions on the subject of the Kishinef massacre was forecasted by the Associated Press some weeks ago in an authorized statement, when the public was definitely informed that Russia regarded the affair as an internal matter, as to which she, in the exercise of her own sovereignty, must refuse to receive suggestions from any other government or outside source.

ISLANDS ARE OUR OWN.

Great Britain Has Never Had Any Claim to Territory Seized Off Borneo by American Warships.

The foreign office in London has no information of the reported seizure of some twenty islands off the coast of Borneo by American warships. Not much importance is attached to the report, although an inquiry will be made. It is asserted in the British capital that the United States navy department has prepared a chart showing the American possessions in the Far East, which was submitted to the state department and approved by Secretary Hay, but Great Britain has received no official notification on the subject.

According to The London Chronicle the action of America in annexing the islands off Borneo raises an exceedingly delicate situation and the British foreign office has asked Washington for an explanation.

The islands concerned, says the paper, are a group of seven which originally belonged to the sultan of Sulu, from whom they passed by a charter in 1881 to the control of the British North Borneo Company, whose officers confirm that they are undoubtedly British territory.

The American side of the question as given by the United States embassy, says The Chronicle, is that the islands are undoubtedly American by right of conquest, having belonged to the Philippines and the sultan of Sulu having confirmed and acknowledged American supremacy over them.

The islands had never been occupied by any European nation, and it is unknown whether Spain ever recognized the trading treaty which existed between the Borneo companies and the inhabitants of the islands.

JUDGE LUMPKIN DEAD.

Beloved Associate Justice of Georgia Supreme Court Stricken by the Grim Reaper.

Samuel Lumpkin, associate justice of the supreme court of Georgia, died very suddenly in Wilkes county early Saturday morning.

The immediate cause of Judge Lumpkin's death was hemorrhage of the lungs, though he had been in failing health for more than two years.

Judge Lumpkin's death was very sudden and wholly unexpected. So quickly did the stroke come that it was impossible for a physician to reach his bedside.

Judge and Mrs. Lumpkin had been in Wilkes county at the home of Mr. Richardson only a few days.

Friday Judge Lumpkin attended a fish fry on Dry Fork creek, and while he was not feeling well, he was in humor of spirits and his wit and humor contributed greatly to the pleasure of the evening. He intended leaving Sunday morning for Atlanta.

Saturday night he retired as usual, saying he was tired from his day's recreation and wished to get a good night's sleep. Just at daylight he was seized with hemorrhage of the lungs and expired almost instantly.

There were no premonitory symptoms of serious lung trouble, indeed, no symptoms of any affection of those organs, and the manner of his death was as startling as the death itself was sudden and unexpected.

The news of the sad event created a sensation throughout the state, for aside from the prestige of his high office, the rare personality of Judge Lumpkin had won him friends throughout the length and breadth of Georgia.

When the news was flashed to Atlanta the supreme court, with whom he was never to sit again, met hastily to discuss the dread event. Grief was depicted on every face and voices trembled with the emotions of strong men. The governor sent out messages of condolence to the widow, and he and the supreme court made preparations for doing honor to the distinguished citizen, taken so suddenly.

Judge Lumpkin comes from a famous family in Georgia, a family that has long been identified with public life in Georgia, and that has given many distinguished men to the state. Judge Lumpkin was 56 years of age, and would have been 57 had he lived till October. He was born in Oglethorpe county, near Lexington, and had lived there a greater part of his life.

He attended the common schools of Oglethorpe county until he entered the University of Georgia at Athens. He remained at the state school for three years graduating there with first honor in a class of 56.

He studied law after leaving the university and after serving several terms in the legislature, he was appointed judge of the Oconee circuit, a position he held until he was elected judge of the supreme court in 1891. Judge Lumpkin's grandfather came to Georgia from Virginia in the early days of the state and was one of the first members of the Georgia legislature.

Miss Mary Richardson, of Alabama, and it was at the house of her brother that Judge Lumpkin died. No children survive the Judge. He leaves only his wife and one sister, Mrs. Lucy Oliver.

TESTIMONY OF BLOODHOUNDS.

In the Case of Other Sleuths, Their Powers Are Often Overrated.

In the sensational murder case at Laramie, Ohio, suspicion appears to have fallen on Father Walker mainly on account of the action of the bloodhounds, which were brought to the scene of the murder. Of course, there is the additional circumstance that Father Walker was in the house and had a chance to commit the crime, but that is an extremely slight ground of suspicion.

The bloodhound is, in one respect, very like the human detective. Romance has been busy with both. The supernatural intelligence of legions of sleuths has been illustrated in fiction, from the pages of Dickens and Conan Doyle to those of thousands of dime novels. This has produced in the minds of the people a confidence in the wonderful skill of detectives which is seldom borne out by their achievements in action. There have been great detectives and there have been great detectives' feats, but they are far less numerous than is generally believed. In like manner the bloodhound has been exploited in story to such a degree as to create a superstitious belief in his infallibility.

The bloodhound of mythology has thus become confounded with the bloodhound of commerce. The bloodhound of mythology has more sagacity than all the detectives of the world done into one. The bloodhound of commerce is only a dog with a keen scent, entirely incapable of performing miracles or conducting an inquiry with even ordinary human intelligence. Yet there are still people who are willing to regard their own inferences from the hound's behavior as sufficient to exclude all reasonable doubt and serve as the basis of a summary and irregular execution of a person suspected.

The trouble about the bloodhound as a witness is that he cannot be sworn. His testimony, therefore, is not to be received in court. As he is not a competent witness it is also not competent to prove by other witnesses the nature of the information which he furnishes or is supposed to furnish. An attempt to cross-examine him is attended with too great difficulties. His services, as a detective, therefore, are subject to very serious drawbacks.

For all that he is sometimes useful. But his usefulness is mainly in the way of affording a clue to the human detectives. When he actually traces the perpetrator of a crime to his hiding place, it is often possible to find on the person or in the residence of the person suspected evidence that he had committed a crime. At all events, in this way attention is sometimes directed to the proper person. But the chances of mistake are very great, and it is important that the limitations of the bloodhound should be better understood than they are in many communities.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Evolution of the Elevator.

The first elevators used in New York City were freight elevators. It was not intended that they should carry men and women, and efforts were made to discourage those persons who would rather take the risk of being killed and ride, than be comparatively safe while walking up and down stairs. A company was first formed to build elevators in New York about forty-two years ago, and for a time it confined itself to those intended to carry freight. It happened, though, that there were lots of persons who were always anxious to ride even if they did risk their lives, and the men who were at the head of the concern began to wonder whether it would not be a good thing to put a few passenger elevators on the market. Would-be customers appeared now and then and the field looked so inviting that the company made a try at it. It seemed soon after this as if the people had just been waiting for elevators. There was a good demand for them and it has been growing ever since.

Passenger elevators, when they were first built, were moved by steam. This was all right for a time, but it was plain that some other motive power would have to be adopted, and another was adopted. After the steam propelled elevators came those moved by hydraulic power, and this is now used on a large percentage of the passenger elevators in the city. Long ago steam was relegated to the background so far as elevators are concerned, and those not moved by hydraulic power are moved by electricity.—New York Sun.

Drawbacks to Cherry Growing.

From the commercial standpoint the development of the cherry business has been retarded by several important factors. The handling of the orchard, and especially the successful packing and marketing of the crop, are more critical operations, and require more skillful labor than is the case with other orchard fruits. The fungus which causes the fruit to rot so easily just as it is ripening, also attacks the blossoms, and the early growth and early blossoming of the trees predisposes the crop to the fatal effects of late spring frosts, and the liability of the body of the fruit to bark-bursting on rich or improperly handled soils sometimes makes the establishment of an orchard a difficult undertaking.—Country Life in America.

How to Capture Wolves.

There is a wide difference of opinion among frontiersmen as to the best way to capture wolves. Some maintain that poison is the quickest and surest, while others say that the use of traps is the only successful method. It is hardly to be denied that poisoned meat is now largely a failure. Twenty-five years ago it was an easy matter to poison wolves; strychnine was new to them, and they were destroyed by hundreds. They have become experts in detecting it, however, and a she wolf can teach her whelps to discriminate between pure and poisoned meats. Some cattlemen run down the wolves with packs of hounds, but this is laborious and costly.

ASSAILS CLEVELAND

Bryan Scores Ex-President in Severest Terms.

MAKES TALK IN CHICAGO

Nebraskan Alleges That Cleveland Stood in With Corporations and that Odium Still Pursues the Democracy.

At Chicago, Saturday, William Jennings Bryan addressed several thousand enthusiastic democrats at the Chicago democratic picnic at Brands park, in the outskirts of the city. He was received with cheers and waving of hats when he stepped to the center of the platform after a short introductory speech by Mayor Harrison, and was frequently interrupted by applause.

His oration was toned with special reference to the possible candidacy of Grover Cleveland in 1904, and his supporters came in for some severe exhortation at the hands of the speaker.

He said in part: "Surely if there ever was a time when the preaching of the democratic gospel ought to be opportune, now is the time. The character of our party is to be determined by the manner in which it meets an opportunity, and the manner in which it meets an opportunity will be determined by the ideal that dominates it. Will our party hesitate or take counsel of its fears? Will it abandon its championship of the people's interests in the hope of conciliating relentless foes or of purchasing a few officers with campaign contributions that carry with them an obligation to be made good out of the pockets of the people? The democratic party must appeal to the democratic sentiment of the country, and this sentiment is far wider than any party. Wherever the question has been submitted in a way that it could be acted upon independently, there always has been an overwhelming majority in favor of that which was democratic, and our party can appeal successfully to this democratic spirit if we but convince the people of our earnestness and of our fidelity to those principles."

"We are handicapped just now by the fact that the last democratic administration that we had was more subservient to corporate dictation than any republican administration that had preceded it, and the record of that administration has been a millstone about the party's neck ever since. The influence exerted by Wall street over the administration's policy, the use of patronage to reward those who betrayed their constituents and the employment of the most reprehensible of republican methods made the administration a stench in the nostrils of the people and kept in the republican party many who were disgusted at that party's course. The odium which Mr. Cleveland's second administration brought upon the party which elected him did more to defeat the party than any one plank of the Chicago platform, or even than all the planks that were most severely criticized. But for the reputation of the administration it would have been impossible to make any campaign at all, and even the reputation, thorough and complete as it was, could not completely deflect the party."

"The greatest menace that the party has to meet today is in the probability of the possibility of the party's return to the position that it occupied in 1892 to 1896. "If the democratic party would stand erect, face the future with confidence, defend the rights of the people and protect their interests wherever attacked—whether the attack comes from the financiers, the monopolists, the tariff barons or from the imperialists—it can look with confidence for a revolution of sentiment that will give us victory worth having, and this victory, when it comes, will not end as the victory of 1892 did—in the demoralization of the party, but in the building up of a democratic organization which will deal aggressively with all of the evils of the government and find its bulwark in the affections and confidence of the masses."
